Dr. Robles is a Senior Consultant in NERA's Intellectual Property and Antitrust and Competition Practices. He has worked on numerous cases in the life sciences industry, including dietary supplements, pharmaceutical products and medical devices.

Dr. Robles actively consults on commercial success, harm resulting from patent infringement (damages; reasonable royalty and lost profits; and irreparable harm), the relevant antitrust market and harm resulting from reverse-payment settlements. His engagements have included products approved in the US, Canada, and Latin America.

Dr. Robles holds a PhD and MA in economics from Harvard University, and an MBA from DePaul University. He received a BBA in economics and finance from the University of Wisconsin-Madison. In addition to publishing health economics articles in top economic journals, Dr. Robles has taught at Harvard University, Georgetown University, and the University of Maryland, College Park. He is the proud recipient of Harvard's prestigious Joseph R. Levenson Memorial Teaching Prize for Excellence in Undergraduate Teaching. Dr. Robles is also a member of the Hispanic National Bar Association (HNBA), the Harvard Latino Alumni Alliance (HLAA), and the American Economic Association (AEA).
