Dr. Gabriella Monahova is an expert in NERA's Washington, DC, office, where she manages and coordinates the work of a team of research analysts. An antitrust economist with broad industry experience, Dr. Monahova examines the competitive effects of proposed mergers and analyses allegations of anti-competitive behaviour in antitrust litigation cases. As part of that work, she has analysed a wide variety of data, including large, terabyte-sized data sets. Her experience spans a number of industries, including health care and medical products, construction products, retail and hospitality, and automotive parts manufacturing.

At the University of Wisconsin-Madison, Dr. Monahova specialized in industrial organization and health care economics. She received a capstone PhD teaching award and the Warren A. Peterson Memorial Award in Economics.

A native of Bulgaria, Dr. Monahova is fluent in Bulgarian and English.
