Mr. Anstey is a Director in NERA's Global Energy, Environment, Communications & Infrastructure Practice, based in London. He specializes in the economics of utility markets and regulation. His work spans public policy, litigation, valuation, due diligence, and competition policy.

His recent work has covered competition in gas and electricity supply markets, arbitration and contract reviews, damages estimation, the design of market rules for gas and electricity, and the design of energy efficiency policies. In addition to his work in energy, Mr. Anstey works across other regulated industries, including the water industry, communications and the gambling sector.

His expertise in competition policy covers restrictive agreements, abuse of a dominant position and state aid. His work across utility markets and regulation spans a wide range of geographies, including the UK and Ireland, much of Western, Central and Eastern Europe, the Far East and the Middle East and Africa.

Mr. Anstey holds an MPhil degree in economics, specializing in microeconomics and industrial organization, and a first class BA in economics and management both from Exeter College, Oxford. Mr Anstey also holds an MA in EU Competition Law from King's College London. Mr. Anstey has been widely published in economic and trade journals, including the Electricity Journal, New Power, Water Utility Management International, and Competition Policy International's Antitrust Chronicle.

Mr. Anstey is recommended as a leading energy expert by Who's Who Legal (2019), where he is commended for "his deep understanding of utility and energy regulation."
