Dr. Michael Dawes advises clients, primarily in the energy and electricity industry, on the challenges that energy transition creates for market and tariff design in electricity markets, with a particular focus on bulk supply and transmission tariff design as well as liquidity policy. He has supported clients across Australia, the Middle East, Great Britain, and North America.

Dr. Dawes provides modelling, analytical, and strategic support to regulators, utilities, and other stakeholders throughout the policy and tariff design process. He also provides support to clients in stakeholder engagement, regulatory engagement, and in dispersal of findings through preparing public facing reports and expert reports for testimony.
