Mr. Ralph Meghames is an Associate Director in NERA's Global Transfer Pricing, Intellectual Property, and Valuation Practices, based in Paris. Mr. Meghames' work spans a plethora of industries for which he provides economic expertise in the context of advisory services, as well as in disputes, litigation, and international arbitration. He has extensive experience designing and implementing complex systems and models driving the allocation of profits within multinational companies.

Mr. Meghames leads projects involving assets and company valuation; transaction pricing for products and services; intellectual property mapping and analysis; and pricing of financial instruments. He also has experience in quantification of damages arising from commercial disputes, and in economic assistance to contract negotiation in relation to remuneration clauses.

Mr. Meghames' work in international arbitration includes shareholders disputes, assessment of damages, pricing analysis, and causation analysis. The expert reports he has contributed to were instrumental in testimonies before the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) and the London Court of International Arbitration (LCIA).

In addition to his master's degree in applied economics and international affairs from Paris Dauphine University and his executive education in advanced valuation from INSEAD Business School, Mr. Meghames studied micro-econometrics and competition economics at the Barcelona Graduate School of Economics. Mr. Meghames is also a lecturer at Paris Dauphine University, where he co-teaches a graduate course on the economics of globalization and international business strategies. Prior to joining NERA, Mr. Meghames worked in the asset management, audit, and banking industries in Europe and the Middle East.
